

Fabrizio COTICCHIA

Full Professor of Political Science, Department of Political and International Science, University of Genoa

Fabrizio COTICCHIA is Full Professor of Political Science at the University of Genoa, where he teaches Security Studies, Foreign Policy Analysis, and European Defence Policy. He previously served as Associate and Assistant Professor at the same institution and has held academic positions at the European University Institute, California State University–Florence, and the Scuola Superiore Sant’Anna in Pisa. As stated in his CV, he has conducted extensive research on “the evolution of international security, peace support operations, security-development nexus, organized crime and geopolitical stability”.

His scholarly work focuses on international relations, contemporary warfare, strategic culture, political parties and foreign policy, and Italian and European defence policy. He is the author of numerous books and articles in leading journals, including International Politics, Journal of European Public Policy, Mediterranean Politics, and International Peacekeeping. His publications also include the monograph “Reluctant Remilitarization” (Edinburgh University Press, 2023).

Professor Coticchia has participated in major international research projects, such as the Horizon Europe Marie Curie Doctoral Network IDEoPOP, and contributes to the Parliamentary Deployment Votes Database. He has been Visiting Fellow at institutions including the EUI and the Bundeswehr Centre for Military History and Social Sciences. His CV notes that he has carried out “several field missions in Africa, the Middle East and South Eastern Europe” in the context of evaluation and development-cooperation programmes.

He regularly provides expert analysis for Italian and international media and serves on editorial boards, including the Italian Political Science Review. His teaching and supervision activities span BA, MA and PhD levels, with a strong focus on security studies and defence policy.
